Public Prosecutor v Hidayatul Akmal bin Azman

B HIGH COURT (JOHOR BAHRU) — CRIMINAL TRIAL NO JA-41H-16–08 OF 2018
SHAHNAZ SULAIMAN JC
22 AUGUST 2019

C Criminal Procedure — Appeal — Appeal against sentencing — Respondent sentenced to fine of RM1,000 for offence of statutory rape — Whether magistrate erred in taking into account fact that respondent had no previous criminal record — Whether fine imposed appropriate with nature of serious offence — Penal Code s 376(1)

D

This was an appeal by the public prosecutor against the sentence imposed by the Magistrate (Child Court) in Johor Bahru on 20 August 2018. The respondent was charged with statutory rape punishable under s 376(1) of the Penal Code. The respondent, who was 17 years 11 months and nine days old at the time the offence was committed, pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to a fine of RM1,000 in default of which three months imprisonment. The appellant submitted that the magistrate had erred as the magistrate had not taken into consideration public interest when sentencing the respondent. It was further contended by the appellant that the magistrate had erred when the magistrate took into account the fact that the respondent had no previous criminal record, the respondent's guilty plea when sentencing the respondent and when the magistrate considered, among others, the fact that the victim was the girlfriend of the respondent at the time of the incident. The appellant had submitted that the offence committed by the respondent was of a serious nature and thus the respondent should be punished with a heavier punishment as the maximum sentence for the offence punishable under s 376(1) of the Penal Code was 20 years imprisonment and whipping. The respondent submitted that the magistrate did not err in the sentencing and that the magistrate had acted in accordance with s 91(1)(d) of the Child Act 2001 and s 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code for youthful offenders.

Held, dismissing appeal and affirming the sentence of the magistrate's court:

I (1) The court should be allowed to determine the appropriate sentence by taking into consideration not only the crime itself but also with regard to each criminal. For young offender, it was in public interest the respondent should be given the opportunity to be a good citizen and rehabilitate himself (see paras 28 & 47).

(2) In light of the fact that the respondent was a child at the point of committing the offence, the court found that the learned magistrate had used her discretion and had not erred when imposing a fine on the respondent. The respondent was a first time offender. The recommendation from the Pegawai Akhlak was that a fine be imposed in accordance with s 91(1)(d) of the Child Act 2001. As a child, it was possible that the respondent has not yet matured and was unable to recognise the consequences of his actions. The respondent should not be imprisoned and whipped. Instead, the respondent should be given the opportunity to become a good member of society (see paras 41 & 46–50).

Responden telah dituduh dengan rogol statutori yang boleh dihukum di bawah s 376(1) Kanun Keseksaan. Responden, yang berusia 17 tahun 11 bulan dan sembilan hari ketika kesalahan itu dilakukan, mengaku bersalah terhadap pertuduhan itu dan dihukum denda sebanyak RM1,000 jika gagal bayar yang mana boleh dipenjara tiga bulan. Perayu telah menghujahkan bahawa majistret telah terkhilaf kerana majistret tidak mengambil kira kepentingan awam apabila menjatuhkan hukuman terhadap responden. Ia selanjutnya dihujahkan lagi oleh perayu bahawa majistret itu telah terkhilaf apabila majistret mengambil kira fakta bahawa responden tidak mempunyai rekod jenayah lampau, pengakuan bersalah responden apabila menjatuhkan hukuman terhadap responden dan apabila majistret mempertimbangkan, antara lain, fakta bahawa mangsa adalah teman wanita responden pada masa kejadian. Perayu telah menghujahkan bahawa kesalahan yang dilakukan oleh responden adalah bersifat serius dan oleh itu responden seharusnya dihukum dengan hukuman yang lebih berat kerana hukuman maksimum bagi kesalahan yang boleh dihukum di bawah s 376(1) Kanun Keseksaan adalah 20 tahun penjara dan sebatan. Responden telah menghujahkan bahawa majistret tidak terkhilaf dalam menjatuhkan hukuman tersebut dan bahawa majistret bertindak menurut s 91(1)(d) Akta Kanak-kanak 2001 dan s 293 Kanun Tatacara Jenayah untuk pesalah juvana.

Diputuskan, menolak rayuan dan mengekalkan hukuman oleh mahkamah majistret:

(1) Mahkamah haruslah dibenarkan menentukan hukuman yang bersesuaian dengan mengambil kira bukan sahaja jenayah itu sendiri tetapi juga berkenaan dengan setiap kesalahan jenayah. Bagi pesalah muda, ia adalah kepentingan awam bagi responden supaya diberikan peluang untuk menjadi rakyat yang baik dan memperbaiki diri beliau (lihat perenggan 28 & 47).

(2) Berdasarkan kepada fakta bahawa responden adalah seorang kanak-kanak ketika beliau melakukan kesalahan tersebut, mahkamah mendapati bahawa majistret yang terpelajar telah menggunakan budi bicaranya dan tidak terkhilaf apabila mengenakan denda terhadap responden. Responden adalah pesalah kali pertama. Cadangan daripada Pegawai Akhlak adalah bahawa denda harus dikenakan mengikut s 91(1)(d) Akta Kanak-kanak 2001. Sebagai kanak-kanak, berkemungkinan bahawa responden belum matang dan tidak menyedari sebab akibat tindakan beliau. Responden tidak boleh dipenjarakan dan dikenakan sebatan. Sebaliknya, responden harus diberi peluang untuk menjadi anggota masyarakat yang baik (lihat perenggan 41 & 46–50).]

THE RESPONDENT'S SUBMISSION

[12] The respondent's contention is that the magistrate did not err when the magistrate sentenced the respondent to a RM1,000 fine in default of which, a three month imprisonment term.

[13] The respondent submitted that the magistrate had in fact prior to sentencing the respondent considered the proposal in the Laporan Akhlak which was prepared by the Pegawai Akhlak from the Welfare Department.

[14] The respondent further submitted that is trite law that an appellate court will not vary or change the sentence of the trial judge unless the trial judge had erred in law or that the sentence imposed by the trial judge was excessive or inadequate. The case referred to is the case of Dato' Seri Anwar Ibrahim v Public Prosecutor [2002] 1 MLRA 266.

[15] The respondent also cited the case of Bhandulananda Jayatilake v Public Prosecutor [1982] 1 MLJ 83; [1981] 1 MLRA 304 relating to the principle that an appellate court should not alter a sentence imposed only because the appellate court may have imposed a different sentence.

[16] Learned counsel for the respondent submitted that the magistrate had acted in accordance with s 91(1)(d) of the Child Act 2001 and s 293 of the Criminal Procedure Code for youthful offenders.

[17] The respondent asserted that the sentence imposed by the magistrate was according to law and that the sentence was not 'manifestly excessive or inadequate'. The respondent referred to the case of Public Prosecutor v Ling Leh Hoe [2015] MLRAU 38.

[18] The respondent further contended that the magistrate had considered the proposal of the Laporan Akhlak and had used her discretion to sentence the respondent. Cases referred to were Tularan Taib v Public Prosecutor [1955] 1 MLRH 480 and Nor Afizal bin Azizan v Public Prosecutor [2012] 6 MLJ 171; [2012] 5 MLRA 20.

PRINCIPLES RELATING TO SENTENCING

[19] In relation to sentencing, the principles were laid out by the federal court in the case of Bhandulanda Jayatilake v Public Prosecutor [1982] 1 MLJ 83 as follows:

> As this is an appeal against the exercise by the learned judge of a vested in him, is the sentence so far outside the normal discretionary limits as to enable this court to say that its imposition must have involved an error of law of some description? I have had occasion to say elsewhere, that the very concept of judicial discretion involves a right to choose between more than one possible course of action upon which there is room for reasonable people to hold differing opinions as to which is to be preferred. That is quite inevitable. Human nature being what it is, different judges applying the same principles at the time in the same country to similar facts may sometimes reach different conclusions (see Jamieson v Jamieson [1952] AC 525 at 549), it is for that reason that some very conscientious judges have thought it their duty to visit particular crimes with exemplary sentences; whilst others equally conscientious have thought it their duty to view the same crimes with leniency. Therefore sentences do vary in apparently similar circumstances with the habit of mind of the particular judge. It is for the reason also that this court has said it again that it will not normally interfere with sentences, and the possibility or even the probability, that another court would have imposed a different sentence is not sufficient, per se, to warrant this court's interference.
> For discretionary judgment of this kind to be reversed by this court, it must be shown to our satisfaction that the learned judge was embarking on some unauthorised or extraneous or irrelevant exercise of discretion. (Emphasis added.)

[20] Judges are therefore vested with a wide discretion in the matter of sentencing.

[21] The function of a court in hearing an appeal against sentence is also well set out in the case of Public Prosecutor v Loo Choon Fatt [1976] 2 MLJ 256 which held:

> In respect of sentencing there can be only general guidelines. No two cases can have exactly the same facts to the minutest detail. Facts do differ from case to case and ultimately each case has to be decided on its own merits. In practice sentences do differ not only from case to case but also from court to court. All things being equal these variations are inevitable if only because of the human element involved. But, of course, there must be limits to permissible variations.
> The principles to be applied in imposing sentence however are the same in every case. The High Court sitting in exercise if its revisionary powers will not normally alter the sentence unless it is satisfied that the sentence of the lower court is either manifestly inadequate or grossly excessive or illegal or otherwise not a proper sentence having regard to all the facts disclosed on the record or to all the facts which the court ought to take judicial notice of, that is to say, that the lower court clearly has erred in applying the correct principles in the assessment of the sentence. It is a firmly established practice that the court will not alter a sentence merely because it might have passed a different sentence.
> ... Presidents and magistrate are often inclined quite naturally to be over-sympathetic to the accused. This is a normal psychological reaction to the situation in which the lonely accused is seen facing an array of witness with authority. The mitigation submitted by a convicted person will also normally bring up problems of the family hardship and the other usual problems of living. In such a situation the courts might perhaps find it difficult to decide as to what sentence should be imposed so that the convicted person may not be further burdened with additional hardship. This in my view is wrong approach. The correct approach is to strike a balance, as far as possible, between the interest of the public and the interests of the accused. Lord Goddard L CJ in Rex v Grondkowski [1946] 1 All ER 560 561 offered some good advice when he said:
> > The judge must consider the interests of justice as well as the interest of the prisoners. It is too often nowadays thought, or seems to be thought, that the interests of justice means only the interest of prisoners. (Emphasis added.)

ANALYSIS AND DECISION

[22] The respondent was sentence under s 376(1) of the Penal Code, which provides the maximum imprisonment of 20 years and whipping.

[23] The magistrate had sentenced the respondent to a RM1,000 fine, in default of which three months imprisonment.

[24] In the grounds of decision, the magistrate had, in imposing the sentence on the respondent, considered the following:

(a) the respondent's guilty plea, reference was made to the case of Tau Lay Chen v Public Prosecutor [2001] 1 MLJ 135 where Augustine Paul J stated:

> It must not be overlooked that the general rule is that an accused should be given a lesser punishment for pleading guilty. There can, as I have said, be a departure from this general rule. However, there must be good reasons for doing so. In that event the reasons for such departure must be kept in mind. If, therefore, a sentence is imposed without taking into consideration a guilty plea then the reasons for doing so must be explained by the sentence. This is because an accused person expects the general rule to operate in his favour when he pleads guilty. The grounds of judgment must therefore show why the guilty plea cannot, on the facts of the case, be considered as a mitigating factor. (Emphasis added.)

(b) the mitigating factors which include:

(i) the respondent's father is employed as an operations assistant at the Ministry of Education earning RM2,400 a month;

(ii) the respondent's mother is a house wife who is diabetic and has high blood pressure; and

(iii) the respondent works at the MMI factory earning RM1,000 a month.

[25] A scrutiny of the grounds of judgment of the magistrate has revealed that the magistrate did not consider the element of public interest when imposing the sentence on the respondent. The magistrate had not taken into account the public interest.

[26] Public interest is an element to be considered by a judge when sentencing an offender, Public Prosecutor v Loo Chon Fatt [1976] 2 MLJ 256 the court stated that:

> One of the main considerations in the assessment of sentence is of course the question of public interest. On this point I need only quote a passage from the judgment of Hilbery J in Rex v Kenneth john Ball 35 Cr App R 164 as follows:
> > In deciding the appropriate sentence a court should always be guided by certain considerations. The first and foremost is the public interest. The criminal law is publicly enforced, not only with the object of punishing crime, but also in the hope of preventing it. A proper sentence, passed in public serves the public interest in two ways. It may deter others who might be tempted to try crime as seeming to offer easy money on the supposition, that if the offender is caught and brought to justice, the punishment will be negligible. Such a sentence may also deter the particular criminal from committing a crime again, or induce him to turn from a criminal to an honest life. The public interest is indeed served, and best served, if the offender is induced to turn from criminal ways to honest living. Our law does not, therefore, fix the sentence for a particular crime, but fixes a maximum sentence and leaves it to the court to decide what is, within that maximum, the appropriate sentence for each criminal in the particular circumstances of each case. Not only in regard to each crime, but in > regard to each criminal, the court has the right and the duty to decide whether to be lenient or severe. (Emphasis added.)

[27] The first paragraph of the quoted above from the case of Rex v Kenneth John Ball would indicate that public interest is the main consideration in the assessment of sentence.

[28] The text then goes on to state that public interest is needed served, and best served, if the offender is induced to turn from criminal ways to honest living. This is achieved by allowing the courts to determine the appropriate sentence (within the maximum limit prescribed by law) taking into consideration, not only the crime itself but also with regard to each criminal.

[29] In this case based on the grounds of judgment, the learned magistrate had considered the guilty plea of the respondent, the economic circumstance of the respondent and the fact that the respondent was a first time offender. The learned magistrate in her grounds of judgment took into account the fact that the respondent and the victim met through the 'WeChat' application and the fact that the victim could be taken out anywhere until late into the night. The learned magistrate further took into consideration that the respondent had seen sexy photographs of the respondent's girlfriend and the respondent admitted to having sexual intercourse with his girlfriend at Hotel Alvis from late night until morning.

[30] The learned magistrate also took into consideration the Laporan Akhlak prepared by the Pegawai Akhlak.

[31] The offence for which the respondent was charged for was statutory rape. This court taken notice that the offence of statutory rape is a serious offence.

[32] Thus, in this case the court will need to weigh between the seriousness of the offence and the interest of the offender.

[33] In Teo Siew Peng & Ors v Public Prosecutor [1985] 2 MLJ 125; [1984] 1 LNS 71, Tan Chiow Thong J:

> In the case of young offender there can be hardly even be any conflict between the public interest and that of the offender. The public have no greater interest that he should become a good citizen. The difficult task of the court is to determine what treatment given the best chance of realising that object. (Emphasis added.)

[34] The statement of Tan Chiow Thong J quoted above indicates that for young offenders it is in public interest that the young offender becomes a good citizen. A

[35] In this case, the respondent was aged 17 years 11 months and nine days at the time the offence was committed. The respondent was thus a minor. B

[36] The respondent was charged in the Child Court.

[37] Section 2 of the Child Act 2001 defines 'child' as:

(a) means a person under age of eighteen years; and C

(b) in relation to criminal proceeding, mean criminal responsibility as prescribed in s 82 of the Penal Code.

[38] Thus, based on the definition above committing the offence was a child. D

[39] Pertaining to the power of court for children on proof of offence, s 91(1) of the Child Act 2001 provides as follow: E

(1) If a Court For Children is satisfied that an offence has been proved the Court shall, in addition to any other powers exercisable by virtue of this Act, have power to —

(a) admonish and discharge the child;

(b) discharge the child upon his executing a bond to be of good behavior and to comply with such conditions as may be imposed by the Court; F

(c) order the child to be placed in the care of a relative or other fit and proper person —

(i) for such period to be specified by the Court; and G

(ii) with such conditions as may be imposed by the Court;

(d) order the child to pay a fine, compensation or costs;
(da) make a community service order; [Ins. Act A1511]

(e) make a probation order under section 98; H

(f) order the child to be sent to an approved school or a Henry Gurney School;

(g) [Del. Act A1511] I

(h) impose on the child, if he is aged fourteen years and above and the offence is punishable with imprisonment and subject to subsection 96(2), any term of imprisonment which could be awarded by a Sessions Court.

[40] Based on the section quoted above, it would appear that the magistrate had applied s 91(1)(d).

[41] In light of the fact that the respondent was a child at the point of committing the offence, this court finds that the learned magistrate had used her discretion and had not erred when imposing a fine on the respondent.

[42] The appellant had submitted that the offence is of a serious nature. The maximum sentence for the offence punishable under s 376(1) of the Penal Code is 20 years imprisonment and whipping indicates the serious nature of the offence.

[43] The deputy public prosecutor that submitted for the appellant gave examples of cases with sentencing trends (please refer to para 11 above).

[44] This court finds that the cases put forth for the sentencing trend can be distinguished from the instant case, as follows:

(a) in the case of Pendakwa Raya lwn Awe bin Sahardi [2016] MLJU 877; [2016] 1 LNS 1320, the accused pleaded guilty to an alternative charge and was a first time offender. However, the accused in this case was a 18 years old at the time of the offence and thus was a youthful offender and not a child;

(b) in the case of Mohd Hanis bin Mohd Nasir & Anor v Public Prosecutor [2016] MLJU 92; [2016] 6 CLJ 457, the first accused was 17 years old at the time of the offence. This case went on to full trial; and

(c) in the case of Stanley Layang Anak Nyadang v Deputy Public Prosecutor [2018] MLJU 1623; [2018] 1 LNS 1661, the accused pleaded guilty and was 16 years old at the time of the offence.

[45] Furthermore, the Court of Appeal in the case of Nor Afizal bin Azizan v Public Prosecutor [2012] 6 MLJ 171; [2012] 5 MLRA 20 held:

> The next question is must all these teenagers who commit similar offence as the appellant be punished with imprisonment?
> It is a well accepted principle of sentencing that young offenders, wherever possible and depending on the nature of the offences committed, should be kept out of prison, especially when there are other adequate means of dealing with them. Bellamy J in Tukiran bin Talib v Public Prosecutor [1955] 1 MLJ 24; [1955] 1 MLRH 480, held that:
> > it is desrible that young offenders, that is, offenders between the ages of 17 and 21, who are also first offenders should be kept out of prison, if possible.

DECISION

[46] Based on the findings of this court and the authorities quoted, this court is of the view that the learned magistrate had not erred in her decision.

[47] This court is of the view that it is in public interest the respondent should be given the opportunity to be a good citizen and rehabilitate himself. In the event the respondent may is imprisoned at a young age, the respondent be turned into a hardened criminal.

[48] The respondent is a first time offender. The recommendation from the Pegawai Akhlak is that a fine be imposed in accordance with s 91(1)(d) of the Child Act 2001.

[49] As a child, it is possible that the respondent has not yet matured and was unable to recognise the consequences of the his actions.

[50] Thus this court is of the opinion that the respondent should not be imprisoned and whipped. Instead, the respondent should be given the opportunity to become a good member of society.

[51] This court thus rejects the appeal from the prosecution and the sentence of the magistrate is hereby affirmed.

Appeal dismissed; magistrate's court sentence affirmed.
